REQUEST FOR MORE TROOPS REPEATED

Col. Sharpe Urges That Ft. Bliss Be Regimental Post.

Col. Alfred C. Sharpe, commander of the local battalion of the 23rd Infantry, has repeated his request to Washington that Fort Bliss be made a regimental post. The proposition of Col. Sharpe to triple the strength of the local garrison may be indicative of "war scare," but the officer only comments on it in a general way.

"I believe," he said, "that a frontier city of El Paso's importance should be well protected as are the frontier points in Germany on the French frontier."

El Paso has been boasting for a regimental post for a long time, and perhaps the removal of interest in the Mexican border will make it possible at this time.

Say good-bye to your corns the very first time you use TIZ. You will never cure them. Corns, bunions or callous, or sweaty, tired, swollen, aching feet any more. It's just wonderful the way the pain vanishes. Rub the corn—hammer it with your fist if you wish—no more pain after TIZ than if there had never been a blemish on your feet. Doesn't that sound good to you? Doesn't it? Then read this:

"The corns on either of my toes were as large as the tablets you make me use them. Today there is no sign of corns on either foot and no soreness. It's an up-to-date Godsend—Sam A. Hoover, Progress, N. C."

Just use TIZ. It's not like anything else for the purpose you ever heard of. It's the only foot remedy ever made which acts on the principle of drawing out all the poisonous excretions which cause sore feet. Powders and other remedies merely clog up the pores. PLAN BUILDING OF MANY NEW BRIDGES Gila River and Creeks Near Silver City to Be Bridged.

Silver City, N. M., March 30.—The board of county commissioners is considering the advisability of erecting numerous bridges upon the public roads of this county, within the present year. Consideration is being given to a number of creeks and to the Gila river, with a view of bridging where it is most badly needed. The matter has not yet progressed to that point where it may be said that the bridges will be built, but plans and specifications have been submitted by local bridge builders and by some of the El Paso firms, and the matter of raising the revenue by the levy of a special tax upon all property at the July meeting of the board is being carefully considered.

Such a tax is now permissible under the law and it is believed that the board will appreciate that it is necessary, in order to make such lasting improvements as are absolutely needed to facilitate travel. Particularly is there great need of a steel bridge across the Gila river, on the Silver City-Mogollon road. Each year the river at this point rears its humanely, two lives have recently been lost in an attempt to ford the river. This road is being built by convict labor and a large portion has been already completed, but the work is unavailing without the building of a bridge across the Gila. Recently, a long line of freight teams were delayed for days, waiting for the river to become low enough to ford, and freight was delayed for days both here and at Mogollon. It is believed that the territory will appropriate a considerable amount for bridge purposes, and that this and Socorro county will unite, and that a bridge, costing approximately $2500 will be built at this point. With such a bridge the convict road for the 30 miles between this city and Mogollon would be completed.

Another point at which a bridge is badly needed and at which one will probably be first erected is that across Cameron creek, which flows through the town of Central. Plans for its construction have already been submitted and will likely be acted upon at a very early date by the board. There is a great deal of travel over this road to Santa Rita, Pecos and Hanover. The road supervisor for this district, with the assistance of the mining companies operating in these mining districts, has collected for immediate use over $5000.

The building of bridges at several other points is being contemplated. There is not now a substantial bridge in the county, and this condition of affairs is just now being seriously taken up by the people generally. Sheriff H. J. Lett, with 12 prisoners for the Santa Fe penitentiary and six insane persons for the asylum at Las Vegas. He was accompanied by deputies Dickinson and McCarty. These convictions were obtained at the recent term of the district court, together with the conviction of James M. Kennedy for murder in the first degree. Kennedy is sentenced to be hanged here on April 21, but it is believed that the governor will commute his life imprisonment because of the question of Kennedy's sanity.

WOMAN IS HELD ON WHITE SLAVE CHARGE

Douglas, Ariz., March 30.—Pauline Willis was given a hearing before United States commissioner Albert Sames, charged with a violation of section 2 of the white slave traffic act of June 25, 1910, which provides that the sale of tickets to or otherwise providing for the transportation of immoral women.

The defendant was held to answer to the federal grand jury in the sum of $500. This is the first case heard under this clause of the white slave traffic act in Arizona.

The company, which has been shut down for the last 10 days, has resumed operation. The company, which has been shut down for the last 10 days, has resumed operation.

During the last few days, since the railroad lines south of here have been opened for traffic, tomatoes, egg plants and other vegetables by the railroad have been rushed through the port of Nogales, consigned to eastern markets. Burned bridges here the cause of considerable loss to the shippers of these vegetables last week. The Nogales Electric Light, Ice and Water company has the contract for supplying these cars with ice upon their arrival on the American side.

JAIL DELIVERY AT PHOENIX PREVENTED BY DISCOVERY.

Phoenix, Ariz., March 30.—A wholesale jail delivery from the Maricopa county jail was averted by the finding of four hack saw blades and iron window bars which had been partially sawed. The cell, in which the tools were found, was occupied by Warren E. Maxey, who was awaiting the action of the grand jury. An alleged accomplice in the attempted jail delivery is Charles Ellis, an employee of a restaurant, who served Maxey's meals. He has been arrested.

The Honorable Senator Sagebrush

FRANCIS LYNDEN

"We must get him back," she said. "Have you thought of any plan?"

"No."

She smiled. "I have a plan. He may have to take a regular course of treatment, and it may make him very ill. Would you mind that?"

David Blount leaned back in his chair and regarded her through half closed eyelids.

"I don't want to see the boy suffer any more than he has to," he objected.

"Neither do I," was the quick agreement; then, with no apparent relevance, "What do you think of Miss Anners?"

The senator sat up, and the slow smile wrinkled humorously at the corners of his eyes. "I haven't thought much about her. She's the kind you can't get near enough to think about, isn't she?"

"She is a young woman with a very bright mind and a very high purpose," was the little lady's summing up of Patricia. "But she isn't altogether a Boston iceberg. She thinks she is in love with her career; but, really, I think she is very much in love with Evan. If we could win her over to our side—"

"This time the senator's smile broadened into a laugh.

"You are away yonder out of my depth now, little woman," he chuckled. "Does your course of treatment for the boy include large doses of the young woman administered frequently?"

"Oh, no," was the instant reply. "I was only wondering if it wouldn't be well to enlist her sympathies."

"Why not if you think best?"

"Will you give me carte blanche to do as I please?" asked the small intriguer.

"You can always outfigure me two to one when it comes to real politics. You have made a fine art of it, Honora."

"You deal with people in the mass, David, and no one can do it better. I deal with the individual. That is all the difference. When do the Annerses go up to the fossil fields?"

"I don't know—any time when you will invite them to make Watrache Hall their headquarters, I guess."

"Then I think it will be tomorrow," said the confident mistress of policies. "It won't do to let Evan see too much of the young woman until after his course of treatment has been begun. Shall we make it tomorrow? And will you telephone Dawkins to bring down the big car? I think Miss Patricia Anners will stand a little impressing. She is very democratic—in theory."

CHAPTER IX.

THE RANK AND FILE.

CONSIDERABLY to his surprise and no less to his satisfaction, the newly appointed "division counsel," as his title ran, was not required to take over the old legal department offices in the second story of the station building, where all the other offices of the company were located. Instead he was directed to fit up a suit of rooms in Temple court, the capital's most pretentious uptown skyscraper, and there was something more than a hint that the item of first cost need not be too closely considered.

It was the vice president himself, writing from Chicago, who authorized the new departure and loosened the purse strings. He wrote:

"Don't be afraid of spending a little money. Make your uptown office as attractive as may be and arrange matters with Ackerton so that you will not be burdened with too much of the routine legal work. A successful legal representative will be a good mixer, as I am sure you are, and will extend the circle of his acquaintance as rapidly and as widely as possible. Your appointment will be fully justified when you shall have made your uptown office a place where the good citizens of the capital and the state drop in for a cordial word with the company's spokesman and for a better mutual understanding of the facts."

Acting upon this suggestion, Blount opened the Temple court headquarters and threw himself energetically into the indicated field. Ackerton, a technical expert with a needle-like mind and the state code at his fingers' ends, was left in charge of the working offices in the railroad building, with instructions to apply to his chief only when he needed specific advice.

At the uptown headquarters Blount gave himself wholly to the pleasant task of making friends. With a good store of introductions upon which to make a beginning and with the open handed, whole souled camaraderie of the west to help along, the list of acquaintances grew with amazing rapidity.

For the three or four weeks after Mrs. Blount whisked the Annerses away to Watrache Hall and the habitat of the megalomaniac, the newly appointed "social secretary" for the railroad, as Honora had dubbed him, refused no invitations, never inquiring whether they were extended to his father's son, to the railroad company's legal chief or to Evan Blount in his proper person.

During this social interval he saw little of his father, though he still occupied his share of the private dining room suit at the Inter-Mountain. Part of the time, as he knew, the senator was at Watrache Hall, looking after his huge landed estate and helping to entertain the visitors from Massachusetts. But now and again the father came and went, and occasionally there was a dinner for two in the hotel cafe, with a little good natured rally from the senator's side of the table.

"Got you chasing your feet right lively in the social merry-go-round these days, haven't they, son? Like it as far as you've gone?" asked the ex-cited king one evening.

"It's all in the day's work," laughed the younger man. "I'll need all the 'pull' I can get a little later on, won't I?"

"I shouldn't wonder if you did, son; I reckon you're doing pretty good work. Was it McVicker's idea or your own—this sudden splash into the social water hole?"

"I don't mind telling you that it is a part of the new policy," returned the social splasher, still smiling. "We are out to make friends this time, friends who will know just what we are doing and why we are doing it."

"It'll mused the senator. "So publicity's the word, is it?"

"Yes, publicity is the word. The Gordon people say they are going to show us up. There won't be anything to show up when the time comes. We are going to beat them to the bill-boards."

"You can't do the circus act—ride two horses at once and do the same stunt on both, son," the senator remarked gravely. "If you're really going to put the saddle and bridle on the publicity nag you've got to turn the other one out of the corral."

"It is already turned out," averred the young man, not affecting to misunderstand. "We buy no votes in this campaign."

The stout assertion was good as far as it went. The new division counsel made it and believed it. But a little later he could not help wondering if he had been altogether candid in making it.

The offices in the uptown skyscraper were not exclusively a railroad social center where the disinterested voter could come and have the facts laid out to him without fear or favor on the part of the ladder. They had come to be also a rallying point for a heterogeneous crowd of ward workers, wire-pullers and small politicians, most of whom were anxious to be employed or retained as benchmen.

Some of these "stretcher men," as Blount contemptuously called them, had been employed in past campaigns; others were still the beneficiaries of the railroad, holding payroll places which Blount acutely suspected were chiefly sinecures.

Latterly this contingent of strikers and heelers had been greatly augmented, and it was beginning to make its demands more emphatic. A dozen times a day Blount had the worn phrase "nothing for nothing" dinned into his ears, and he was shrewdly suspecting that his office had been made a dumping ground for the other departments.
